

Submission 73 – Christiaan Jacobs

I have 3 comments.

1. I have no concerns with CASA or law enforcement able to track and identify drones. In fact I think it is a good idea. My concern is over the general public "Karens" who will be annoying local police with calls that they see drones but can't find them on their app or even worse able to track down the drone operator and bother the pilot while flying. I feel this could easily overwhelm local law enforcement with ridiculous complaints.
2. I believe that drones under 250grams which appears to be the international standard in my mind should be exempt from RID requirements.
3. RID is not monitored by commercial or private aircraft. It provides no safety to these aircraft. This solely allows the general public track down drone operators.
