

Submission 19 – Confidential

You can't be serious about adding more noise to already sky-high noise pollution in our suburbs. Spend a thought on shift workers, or residents who just to enjoy some quiet time in their backyard. What about dogs being upset and bark for for hours? What about privacy? Anyting with cameras operating wirelessly can be, and will be hacked. Just because some billionaires want to make more money, we don't have to put up with our 'quiet' enjoyment of our property been more affected than it is already. There are good alternatives, such as battery powered delivery vans. Or electric bikes. You name it. I for one don't want to have droines above my house aeveral times a day just because my neighbour is a shopping junkie. It this goes ahead, I'm sure even the proverbially laid back Aussies will deliver a fight never seen before.
